

Where to draw the line?

It's not just a single scenario, we have to look at.

It's actually looking at governance in more abstract terms and actually questioning some of these basic assumptions about independence about autonomy and about altruism all through this process. I think in many ways, none of those three logically should apply as basic presumptions in a robust governance system going forward.