

I am grateful to the members of the APRALO community to nominate me for the ALAC. I have been a strong supporter of the participation of internet users and diversity in ICANN policy processes. This includes understanding, representing, and advocating for the best interest of Internet end users. My daily work and community development efforts involve providing remote rural communities with access to the Internet and realising their social and economic potential. This requires understanding the needs of these communities and representing their interests. I am sensitive to the needs and requirements of users and have the ability to put people first instead of personal interests and stepping up where necessary to be both vocal and provide inputs. I believe that my participation in ALAC will not only bring a fresh perspective but will strengthen representation of both APRALO and the internet users community in ICANN policy processes.
