My name is David Cake, I am an experienced ICANN participant, having been a GNSO Councillor and Vice-Chair, and involved in multiple policy processes, most recently as one of the Vice-Chairs of the Next Generation RDS group that was suspended due to overlap with this group. I am a long time activist on concerns including privacy and digital rights, including around a decade as Chair of Electronic Frontiers Australia. Professionally I am a technical consultant with a computer science and programming background, currently mostly working for Red Piranha, an information security firm, and I am a part time PhD candidate at Curtin University. I am based in Perth, Western Australia, and I am participating in this WG as a member of NCSG.
