

My name is Collin Kurre and I represent ARTICLE 19, a London-based human rights organization. In parallel to leading our ICANN engagement, I'm responsible for developing new tools and resources for assessing the human rights impacts of internet infrastructure providers, including registries/ars.

My engagement in DNS policy has steadily increased since 2015, when I became interested in ICANN while writing my master's thesis on multistakeholder internet governance. Within the ICANN community, I've been primarily involved in the CCWG-Acc and the Working Party on ICANN and Human Rights (which I co-chair).

Look forward to creating what I hope will be a future-proof solution to this challenge.
