

Garth Graham. A dark mirror of Internet use. July 11, 2014.

To account.pdf

This essay is an impressionistic summary of what I'm learned via participation in ATLAS II about ICANN's alignment and sensitivity to the world that organizations like Telecommunities Canada inhabit. I conclude that the individual Internet user is NOT yet at the heart of ICANN. A major cultural shift, a re-framing of its way of doing things, would need to occur to make that happen.